Victim Service Providers in the United States, 2017 – This report provides statistics from the National Census of Victim Service Providers (VSPs), the first national data collection on the number and characteristics of these organizations. The census was conducted by BJS with support from the Office for Victims of Crime. The report describes the types of organizations that served victims, maps their locations, and reports on the rate of VSPs per 100,000 U.S. residents by state.

Tools for Addressing Gender Bias in Sexual Assault Response Webinar – In this brief 30-minute webinar, End Violence Against Women International (EVAWI) will offer a tour of these resources to help identify the presence of gender bias, mitigate its influence, and address key questions about how bias can disadvantage (or advantage) the victim and/or suspect.

Becoming a Trauma-Informed Court Reference Guide – A trauma-informed court is one that approaches court-involved individuals from a perspective of “what happened to you?” instead of “what is wrong with you?” and does so to create a more healing approach to the environment, policy and practice. Most families that come into court with child welfare cases are in crisis, therefore courts could be considered “socio-legal emergency rooms.” By approaching the view of the court this way, stakeholders can prevent re-triggering and re-traumatizing families.

Community Collaborations to Build Service Array – Capacity Building Center for States' article and list of relevant resources on Community Collaborations to Build Service Array. "Community partners, when working collaboratively, can achieve more positive outcomes for children and families than each partner working separately. The goal of community collaboration is to bring together individuals, agencies, organizations, and other community members with a common vision and shared goals to systematically solve existing and emerging problems that could not be solved easily by one group alone. Successful community collaborations often are anchored by a shared stake in and accountability for achieving shared goals." Read the full article here.

Release of SOAR for Native Communities Online Module –

The Department of Health & Human Services, Administration for Children and Families (HHS/ACF) announces the launch of the SOAR for Native Communities online module. This free training was developed in collaboration with:

- HHS Administration for Native Americans (ANA)
- National Council of Urban Indian Health (NCUIH)
- Jeri Moomaw, Innovations Human Trafficking Collaborative
- Gwendolyn Packard, Training and Technical Assistance Specialist, National Indigenous Women’s Resource Center
- Theresa Friend, CNM, Forensic Nurse Consultant, Indian Health Service
- Bonnie Clairmont, Tribal Law and Policy Institute
- Kandi Fowler, Project Beacon, American Indian Center of Chicago

Through a public health approach, the SOAR for Native Communities online module helps those serving indigenous populations to better understand human trafficking and its impact on Native communities. The training includes resources relevant to indigenous populations and supports professionals in building trauma-informed and culturally responsive interventions to human trafficking in American Indian, Alaska Native, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander communities.

SOAR Online is a series of training modules that can be completed anytime, anywhere. Because individuals who have experienced trafficking or who are at risk of trafficking access a variety of services, SOAR Online includes training tailored for specific professionals on how to identify and respond to human trafficking.
